Three New Massage Therapists Join Creative Wellness

EAST LANSING-- Creative Wellness has added three new Massage Therapists to its growing family of practitioners. Corey Rivera is a Lansing area native who trained at the Ann Arbor Institute of Massage Therapy. Corey has experience in myofascial, Neuromuscular and Trigger Point Therapy which can help with issues related to prolonged computer use and work stress. Corey also works to raise awareness of the benefits of complementary medicine and the importance of having a well-rounded health and wellbeing plan. Analise Sawyer completed her training at Lansing Community College and has experience working with geriatric patients to help alleviate complications from conditions such as Parkinson's, arthritis, and range of motion loss. She also has experience providing chair massages at events such as bike tours, 5K races, and trade and bridal shows. Chris DeGetmon, NCTMB (National Certification Board for Therapeutic Massage and Bodywork), and has nine years of experience in massage therapy. He has completed training at the Scherer Institute of Massage Therapy in Sante Fe, NM, the Boulder College of Massage Therapy and the Ann Arbor Institute of Massage Therapy. Chris specializes in advanced therapeutic massage, deep tissue and structural integration, pregnancy massage, and reflexology. All of the massage therapists at Creative Wellness are experienced in clinical massage therapy and see clients for a wide range of treatment options.
